

A Housing Colony at the Urban-Rural Interface

- M.Arch. Thesis Studio • 2003-4 • Keith Evan Green
- Selected by the AIA as among the “Best Practices in Sustainable Design Education” across the US.
- Presented and Published at the 2005 ACSA National Conference - the only paper accepted from a faculty member at Clemson.

The studio focussed upon creating a vital housing colony accommodating the living and working activities of a diverse group of inhabitants, located at the threshold between farmland and new development in Greenville, South Carolina. Located at the center of the Atlanta-Charlotte corridor, the colony was envisioned as a living system cultivating a larger network of live-work communities along this rapidly developing axis.

